Healthy Teen Dating:
A Guide for Educators and Youth Service Providers

Presented by the Governor’s Family Violence Council and the Governor’s Office of Crime Control & Prevention
2018

Updated: October 2018
A Message from Governor Larry Hogan

Dear Educators and Youth Serving Professionals,

I am pleased to present the Healthy Teen Dating: A Guide for Educators and Youth Serving Professionals.

In 2016, the Governor’s Family Violence Council voted to create a workgroup to study ways to bring healthy teen dating education to all Maryland counties. The purpose of this guide is to provide information on teen dating violence prevention programs to address the needs of youth who are at risk for dating violence. Each year, nearly 1.5 million high school students nationwide experience physical abuse from a dating partner. In 2014, more than 10 percent of Maryland high school students reported experiencing physical and/or sexual dating violence.

This guide contains relevant data and literature, educational resources, and suggested curriculum on teen dating violence which aligns with Maryland State Education Standards. You will also find a list of teen dating violence prevention programs in the state to help you connect the youth you serve with agencies that can best help them.

Our hope is that this guide will be a valuable resource for you to provide teen dating violence prevention support to our teens in need. In doing so, we can prevent future violence and foster healthy relationships within our schools and communities.

Sincerely,

Larry Hogan
Governor
The Goal of this Guide

In 2016, the Governor’s Family Violence Council voted to create a workgroup to study ways to bring healthy teen dating education to all counties in the State. The workgroup looked at best practices and evaluated whether a statewide approach to this issue would increase awareness and education. The workgroup considered ways to engage public and private middle and high schools in this prevention effort.

As a part of the information-gathering process, the workgroup surveyed Maryland local education agencies (LEAs) to understand current school offerings and potential barriers. Of the 24 LEAs in Maryland, 19 responded to the survey. While the majority stated that their LEA offered some healthy relationship curriculum, few described stand-alone, focused education on this topic.

Of those surveyed, 84% of respondents stated they believed that teen dating violence education was important to offer in schools, but respondents described numerous barriers to implementation:

This resource guide was created to address these barriers by providing low cost or free options for classroom implementation that maximize impact even where limited time is available in the curriculum.
The Prevalence and Impact of Teen Dating Violence

What is teen dating violence?

Teen dating violence (TDV) is the physical, sexual, psychological, or emotional violence within a dating relationship, including stalking. TDV can include any pattern of behavior that a person may use to gain and maintain power over their partner. This can include financial abuse and digital abuse. Digital dating abuse is the use of technology (i.e. texting, social networks) to harass, stalk, or intimidate a partner. Digital abuse often takes the form of psychological or emotional violence.

How common is TDV?

National estimates of TDV victimization depend on various demographic factors, with female students reporting TDV close to two times more often than their male counterparts. Nearly 1.5 million high school students nationwide experience physical abuse from a dating partner in a single year.

Overall, one in three females and one in seven males report experiencing TDV. And one in five adolescents reported physical TDV and roughly one in ten reported sexual TDV.

In Maryland, 10.1% of high school students reported experiencing physical dating violence and 10.3% reported experiencing sexual dating violence.

Who is at highest risk?

TDV occurs in higher rates among Black and Latinx youth, including those living in urban and economically disadvantaged communities. One study found that the prevalence of TDV victimization among Black and Latinx youth was 41%. About 30% of the youth in this study reported both victimization and perpetration in current or past relationships.
Recent research looked at risk based on gender. One study determined that females are equally as likely as males to perpetrate TDV, especially with minor acts of physical aggression. The study also found that female-on-male aggression is often underreported due to issues of stigma and masculinity.

Lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, questioning (LGBTQ) youth are also at a higher risk for all types of dating violence victimization and perpetration, when compared to heterosexual youth. Specifically, transgender and female youth are at the highest risk of victimization and perpetration of TDV.

Older teens are at an increased risk of sexual TDV victimization.

Why does TDV happen?

Teens learn how to behave in relationships from peers, adults, and the media. Unfortunately, these examples often suggest that violence in a relationship is normal. According to the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) the risk of having unhealthy relationships increase for teens who:

- Believe that dating violence is acceptable
- Are depressed, anxious, or have other symptoms of trauma
- Display aggression towards peers or display other aggressive behaviors
- Use drugs or illegal substances
- Engage in early sexual activity and have multiple sexual partners
- Have a friend involved in dating violence
- Have conflicts with a partner
- Witness or experience violence in the home

What are the warning signs of TDV?

Teen dating violence often exists on a spectrum. The following are some warning signs to recognize TDV:

- Checking his/her cell phone or email without permission
- Constantly putting him/her down
- Extreme jealousy or insecurity
- Explosive temper
- Isolating him/her from family or friends
- Making false accusations
- Mood swings
- Physically hurting him/her in any way
- Possessiveness
- Telling him/her what to do
- Pressuring or forcing him/her to have sex

Click here to learn more about how unhealthy relationships work.
How does TDV impact health?

Unhealthy or violent relationships can have severe short and long-term effects on a teen’s development. Youths who have experienced TDV are at a higher risk of experiencing the following:

- Depression
- Anxiety
- Increased use of alcohol, tobacco, and drugs
- Risky sexual behaviors: unprotected sex, pregnancy, multiple sex partners, STIs
- Eating disorders
- Thoughts of suicide

Youth who experience TDV are at an increased risk of re-victimization in college and adulthood. Moreover, youth who experience TDV are roughly 2 to 3 times as likely to attempt suicide.

Taking TDV Prevention to the Classroom

TDV prevention programs reduce violence

TDV can be prevented when teens, parents, schools, and communities work together to implement evidence-based prevention strategies. School-based dating violence prevention programs have shown to be effective in preventing physical, sexual, and emotional violence in adolescent dating relationships and may help prevent violence in adult relationships as well.

Students weigh-in on effective programs

Based on focus group and survey research, middle and high school students reported greater satisfaction with TDV prevention programs that had:

- Mix-gendered activities
- Mentoring from trusted adults or older adolescents
- A focus on personal development of values (love, respect, self-esteem, etc.)
- Used real-life stories of TDV, followed by clear presentation of information
- Included information about characteristics of healthy relationships

Maryland State Education Standard Alignment

Including teen dating violence curriculum meets several of the Health Education standards provided by the Maryland State Board of Education.

Standard 1: Mental and Emotional Health

- Topic A, Communication: Recognize and apply effective communication skills
- Topic D, Decision Making: Apply the decision-making process to personal issues and problems
• Topic G, Conflict Resolution: Justify the nature of conflict and conflict resolution

Standard 4: Family Life and Human Sexuality
• Topic D, Healthy Relationships: Distinguish between healthy and unhealthy relationships
• Topic J, Sexuality and Culture: Evaluate the influence of communication and decision-making on sexual behavior

Standard 5: Safety and Injury Prevention
• Topic C, Harassment
  o Indicator 1: Demonstrate appropriate responses to harassment and other violent behaviors
  o Indicator 2: Recognize contributors to harassment, intimidating behaviors, and violence
• Topic D, Abuse and Assault: Assess and respond appropriately to sexual aggression

Evaluating Effective Programs

Research has demonstrated that effective prevention programs follow certain principles. Effective programs:

1. Are comprehensive
2. Use varied teaching methods
3. Offer sufficient dosage
4. Are theory driven
5. Encourage positive relationships
6. Are appropriately timed
7. Are socio-culturally relevant
8. Include outcome evaluation
9. Are implemented by well-trained staff

The CDC and other agencies provide tools to help develop, evaluate, and sustain a public health approach to preventing teen dating violence. Several of these resources are provided below:

CDC Capacity Assessment and Planning Tool

CDC Health Education Curriculum Analysis Tool (HECAT)

CDC School Health Index
Teen Dating Violence Prevention Programs

The following list is not intended to be comprehensive, but instead to provide a menu of possible options. For more information, please consult the website associated with the individual program. Please provide feedback to the Family Violence Council as described on page 11 of this guide.
